INTRODUCTION

THIS exhibition of United States and Colonial Coins is intended to illustrate the coinage of this country from the earliest times up to the present day.

The term Colonial, as applied to the coinage, embraces more than the actual Colonial period. It includes coins struck both in the Colonies, and in England for use in the Colonies, also all coins and tokens issued after the Revolution, and before the establishment of the United States Mint in 1792, by authority of the Government, and of several of the states, and by individuals having no authority both in America and England.

The earliest coins were issued in the Sommer Islands—now Bermuda—about 1616, and while the colony never became a part of the United States, these coins are usually included in the Colonial series.

These were followed in 1652 by the New England Coins—Shilling, Six-pence and Three-pence—coined in Boston by John Hull under authority of the Colony of Massachusetts; the design was changed the same year, the coins being known as the Willow tree, Oak tree and Pine tree series, all bearing the date of 1652 though coined during a period of over thirty years; a Two-penny piece, of the Oak tree variety, was first coined in 1662, and bears that date. An interesting variety is known as the Good Samaritan Shilling. There has been considerable controversy as to the origin of this piece. Crosby's Early Coins of America contains a long account of it, and some further information will be found in the supplement to the Catalogue of the Bushnell Collection, by S. H. & H. Chapman, 1882.

Silver coins of the value of One-shilling, Six-pence and Four-pence were struck in England for the colony of Maryland, and are known as the Lord Baltimore coins; the dies were prepared in 1659 and some sample coins sent to the colony, but they were not put in circulation until 1662.

An Irishman from Dublin, named Mark Newby, brought a large quantity of copper Half-pence to New Jersey in November 1681, and these coins had an extensive circulation. There are also silver coins struck from the same dies.

The Rosa Americana coins, beginning in 1722, of various denominations, struck in copper and brass, were made in England and had large circulation in the colonies.

In 1737 and 1739 John Higley, a blacksmith, issued copper coins in Granby, Connecticut, the first of these bore the inscription THE VALUE OF THREE PENCE. There appears to have been some question as to this value for the later issues are inscribed VALUE ME AS YOU PLEASE. This was entirely a private venture. The copper was mined in the immediate neighborhood.

Various other tokens of the Colonial period are described in the catalogue.

The first attempt that the government of the United States made to coin money is represented by a set of four silver pattern coins, based on a decimal system of coinage devised by Gouverneur Morris, the largest, smaller than a silver Dollar, to be called a Mark or 1000 units, the next a Quint or 500 units—of which there are two varieties—and the remaining one a Cent or 100 units. But one set of these pieces is known to exist and according to Crosby—who describes them very fully—it is probable that only one set was struck. Two of these pieces were in the possession of Charles Thomson, the Secretary of the first Congress, and were found in his desk after his death. They bear the date of 1783 and are known as the Nova Constellatio patterns.

There is also a series of Nova Constellatio coppers, which were struck in England on an order from a man in New York, who is believed to have been Gouverneur Morris. These bear the dates 1783, 1785 and 1786. There are several varieties of each date.

The only coins struck by authority of the United States, that were actually in circulation before the establishment of the Mint, were the copper pieces known as the Fugios, bearing the date 1787.

Copper coins of the size of a Cent were issued by Vermont from 1785 to 1788, by Connecticut during the same years, by New Jersey from 1786 to 1788, and in 1787 and 1788 Massachusetts issued the first coins bearing the value of Cent and Half-cent.

There are coins known as New York Cents, but no evidence of state authority for their coinage has been discovered. Also many other pieces, some struck in America and some in England of more or less doubtful origin.

One most interesting coin is known as the Brasher Doubloon, a gold piece weighing 408 grains, struck by Ephriam Brasher, a jeweler of New York in 1787.

A considerable number of tokens and patterns of this period, of which a few are of silver, bear the portrait of George Washington; some of these may be merely small medals, but the majority of them have been in actual circulation.

The pieces known as "Continental Dollars" in silver, brass and pewter are patterns, and there is considerable doubt as to their origin.

The first coins put out by the United States Mint, were the copper Cents, and Half-cents of 1793, followed in 1794 by the silver Dollars, Half-dollars, and Half-dimes, in 1795 by the gold Eagles, or Ten-dollar pieces, and Half-eagles, and in 1796 by the gold Quarter-eagles, silver Quarter-dollars and Dimes. Other denominations were issued in later years, and with the exception of the Double-eagle, and nickel Five-cent piece, were discontinued sooner or later. All the denominations of the first four years are still issued, with the exception of the Dollar, Half-dime and Half-cent.

This country might be called the pioneer in the use of nickel for coins, this metal was first used, largely alloyed with copper, in the small Cent of 1856, and with less alloy in the Three-cent piece of 1865 and the Five-cent piece of 1866.

Coins are or have been issued in seven different Mints, the principal one, in Philadelphia, was established in 1792, and has issued coins each year up to the present time, the denomination that was issued with the greatest regularity being the Cent, which has been coined from 1793 to the present time with the exception of 1815. Coins of the Philadelphia Mint bear no mint mark.

The branch Mints are:

New Orleans, established 1838, discontinued 1861, reopened 1879, discontinued 1909, since which time it has been used as an Assay office only—Mint Mark O.

Charlotte, N. C. established 1838 discontinued 1861—Mint Mark C.

Dahlonega, Ga., established 1838, discontinued 1861—Mint Mark D.

San Francisco, established 1854, still in operation—Mint Mark S.

Carson City, Neb., established 1870, discontinued 1893—Mint Mark CC.

Denver, Col., established 1906, still in operation—Mint Mark D.

It has been customary since the establishment of the mint, to strike, from time to time, at the Philadelphia Mint, pattern and experimental coins, when the question of new designs has been under consideration also to strike trial pieces in other metals, from accepted dies, and the nearly complete collection of these pieces forms an important part of the exhibition.

It has been the custom for many years, to strike proof coins of the various denominations at the Philadelphia Mint, these are precisely similar to the ordinary coins except that being struck by hand and the dies and metal being specially prepared, they have a finer finish. They are sold at the Mint during the year of issue only, at a slight advance over their face value.

The coinage of gold has been carried on by individuals, at various times in Georgia, North Carolina, Utah, California, Oregon and Colorado, in some cases with state authority, and in others with no authority at all. These pieces served a good purpose in the times of scarcity of the United States coins in the places where they circulated. They are known as private, or territorial gold coins, and form a most interesting part of the American series.

In the early days of the Civil War, when there was a great scarcity of silver currency, and before the issue of the small notes, known first as postal, and later as fractional currency, about all the small change obtainable consisted of postage stamps, which, being adhesive, were most troublesome when used in that way. Many merchants had little metal cases made, which were about the size of the copper cent. In each case would be placed a postage stamp, the face covered by a piece of mica, and on the back the advertisement of the merchant. These passed current at the value of the stamp contained, and are known as Encased Postage Stamps.

In 1861 the Confederacy made two attempts at a coinage. The branch mint at New Orleans, being in the hands of the Confederates, a die for the obverse of a silver Half-dollar was prepared in 1861, the obverse die of the United States Half-dollar of that year was used for the reverse. Four coins only are said to have been struck, of these three have disappeared, the one shown being the only one known at the present time.

In the same year an order was placed by the Confederate government with Richard Lovett, Jr., a Philadelphia die cutter, for the dies of a coin of the value of One-cent.

The matter becoming known and talked about Mr. Lovett never made delivery of the dies. He later struck from them a limited number of pieces in gold, silver, copper and copper-nickel. The dies and an example of the so-called Confederate cent in each metal are a part of the exhibition.

There are also exhibited a collection of freaks, or mis-struck pieces, coins of the United States Insular Possessions and coins struck at the United States Mint for the Republic of Panama.

There is a very large series of metallic tokens, mostly of base metal issued during many years, by individuals, firms and corporations, known as Hard-Times tokens, merchants' cards or store cards, and Civil War tokens. These are not included in the exhibition as they have no government authority, and did not, as in the case of the private gold coins, circulate at a denomination represented by their intrinsic value.

The exhibition is composed of selections from the Society's collection and many others, and it forms a comprehensive display of the United States and Colonial coinage, of which but a few known varieties are lacking.
